

Autism: Embracing the Spectrum!

Exploring Special Interests and Supporting Autistic Learners in Early Years and Beyond.

Some autistic children get really interested in one thing. Some children on the spectrum get really interested in lots of things. Some interests can last for decades. Some come and go but they are always THE most important thing in the world at that time! In the world of autism we call these 'special interests'. Autistic children shine with a diverse spectrum of learning strengths and preferences. While some thrive on visual input and excel in tasks requiring precision and detail, others may have exceptional auditory memory or a knack for building intricate systems. Many excel in creative problem-solving, approaching challenges from unique angles and finding innovative solutions. Remember, understanding individual strengths and preferences is key to unlocking every child's potential, and autistic learners' unique gifts add incredible richness to the learning landscape.
